

WEDNESDAY EVEN'G, APRIL 17, 1901

THE PRIMARY ELECTION OF 1901 is now a part of history. It was long anticipated, was the subject of numerous predictions, optimistic to some, but the hopes and bombastic imaginings which have been vaporing lo these many years have vanished like thin air and the community has again assumed its healthy equilibrium. The result yesterday proved conclusively that there will be enough members of the new Council to form a safe balance wheel to check rainbow chasers and those who would cause the city to plunge into dangeous experiments. All would rejoice to see and all hope some day to enjoy many needed modern improvements. Those composing the element who organized the progressive movement are in the main representative citizens and they were doubtless actuated by honest motives, but that many of their ideas were impracticable or premature was believed by others no less prominent and in every way as much interested in the city's welfare. The verdict of the people yesterday was plainly in substance that a majority did not see their way clear at present, at least, to embark on an uncertain sea while a conservative and safer route toward the desired end could be followed. The issues involved in yesterday's election had been discussed for a long time, and eventually had to be submitted to a vote. The result is known, and now let all vie in devising the best way possible to improve our streets, meet our honest obligations and build up old Alexandria on a rock-ribbed foundation.

WITH AN army of 250,000 men, it would seem that General Kitchener ought to be able to carry out some of his evolved plans of "getting around" the Boers, particularly in view of the report that DeWet has lost his mind. It seems, however, as suggested by the Richmond Dispatch, that however much of his mind DeWet may have lost, it isn't the military part of it that has Bers, particularly in view of the reisn't the military part of it that has gone. In strategy, buldness, and no. bility, the Boer leader seems still to be thoroughly himself. Mr. Montague White, who was before the Boer war

The republican party was arraigned for failure to decrease representation from States where the negro is disfranchised and one of the speakers wanted organizations for protection. He said: "We have passed hrough one ordeal-the next is coming. Let us be prepared to meet it." Such talk as that of course will make the southern States more determined to disfranchise the vicious and illiterate

THE FIRST election to take place in Maryland, under the law recently enacted by the legislature requiring voters to prepare their ballots, was held in Frederick county yesterday and the democrats won a decided victory. At the last election the republicans carried the city by a majority of two hundred, but the democrats derived sufficient benefit from the new law to enable them to elect their ticket. The illiterate colored vote of the coupty was 265. One hundred and thirteen ballots were thrown out. The loss was apparently divided evenly between the two parties.

Gen. Wood will soon come to Washington to confer with the President and Georetary Root on Cuban affairs. It is then that the question of what will be done to the island provided its constitution is not satisfactory will be settled. From the tone of Secretary Root's remarks on the subject, the commission from the Cuban convention will receive but little consideration unless they are submissive; in fact, their mission would seem to be practically useless. The Secretary expresses the utmost indifference as to whether they come or not. They know, it is said at the department, when the President is to leave Washington on his western trip and how long he is to be absent; they must judge for themselves the date of their arrival. Following his custom the President will throw the entire respossibility upon the legislative branch of the government. The Cuban delegates will be told that the Platt amendment was an act of Congress can modified compliance with its terms be permitted to Cuba. General Wood's trip to Washington is to quiet the many stories to the effect that in his handling of the Cuban convention he lacked diplomacy. A programme will be arranged calculated to impress the visiting Cubans with the futility of further opposition to the will of the administration and on the whole it is believed that their trip will not b without beneficial results, although in directly.
